52. YouTube upload, are we following the below API?

Link - https://developers.google.com/youtube/2.0/developers\_guide\_protocol\_uploading\_videos

The YouTube Data API provides two methods for uploading videos to YouTube. A newly uploaded video will be included in a user's uploaded videos feed a few minutes after the upload completes and YouTube finishes processing the video. In addition, a newly uploaded video will typically be included in search results a couple of hours after the upload completes and YouTube finishes processing the video. However, this delay may be longer during periods of heavy API server loads.

- Browser-based uploading allows you to accept video uploads from your users without having to handle, host or proxy the actual video files. You should choose a browser-based uploading process if you do not want to host or store the uploaded video files.
- Direct uploading allows you to add videos that are in your video library to YouTube. You should choose a direct-upload implementation if you want to host or store videos uploaded through your site and also add those videos to YouTube. In a direct-uploading scenario, when a user uploads a video through your site, the video will be sent to your servers. Your application will subsequently send an API request to upload the video from your server to YouTube.

The API also supports a direct, resumable uploading process, which can be restarted from the point of interruption if the connection between your application and YouTube is lost at any point during the uploading process.

In addition to choosing an uploading method, you must also choose the authentication scheme appropriate for your application. The following sections provide additional information about the video uploading process:

53. Edit Article - Go to other tabs(customer plans not to publish it) - Click on Add Article, still the old edit article is coming. If customer change the tab it should show a warning and get vanish. Should not come again while trying to add a new article :)
